NO VETO BECAUSE OF LITERACY TEST

Impression Given That Wilson Will Not Act Adversely on Immigration Measure.

HOUSE BILL IN COMMITTEE

Will Be Substituted for AIP Pending Proposals Now Under Consideration.

Washington, February 7.—Members of the Senate Committee on Immigration today gathered the impression that President Wilson would not veto the pending immigration bill because of the literacy test.

The House bill was taken up in committee and considered for upwards of an hour, informally. Senator Smith, of South Carolina, chairman of the committee, who had conferred with the President, did not tell his colleagues what the President thought or what his own views on the literacy test were.

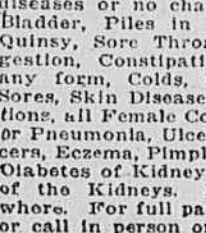

"I am not in position now to say what the committee will do, nor to discuss the President's views," the restrictive features of the bill, and the climax of the measure. When the committee determines upon the course it will recommend, we will make public a frank statement of our position.

It was decided today that the Burnett bill, as passed by the House, should be substituted for all pending measures in the Senate so that when it goes to conference it will be the House bill with such amendments as the Senate may make. This will expedite its passage.

Whether hearings shall be held has not been determined, but the demand for them on the literacy question may cause the committee to conduct hearings for a reasonable time. Some members of the committee today expressed the opinion that the restrictive features of the House bill may be modified.

The protest of Italy against the publication of the Burnett bill, requiring American surgeons upon immigrant ships, was laid before the committee today. Conferences with the President, Secretary of State over this and other protests that may come will be held before the committee takes definite action, although it was believed by some members today that the provision will be rejected. Practically the same result may be accomplished in another way, and possible irritation on the part of the Italian government avoided.

At present, the committee is considering only the minor features of the bill. The vital sections, such as the literacy test, will be postponed until the rest of the bill has been thoroughly considered and agreed upon.
